Main Topic

Italian reactions to Ferrari Luce electric supercar

Consumer Pulse

Right now Italians are loudly disappointed with the new Ferrari Luce. Common cries: 'A Ferrari cannot be electric Ø>Ý.' and the design looks like 'a clothes iron' or bland and soulless. Purists mourn the loss of engine sound and brand DNA while a few praise the innovative real-sound amplification tech and crash-test bravery. Nostalgia for Enzo-era Ferraris is everywhere, mixed with memes and critical videos. Sentiment is mostly negative and emotional from enthusiasts, though some see it as inevitable progress. Heavy debate, not much love.

Main Signals

- Design slammed as scialbo, impersonal, or 'ferro da stiro' (clothes iron)
- Repeated rejection: real Ferraris need the engine roar and soul, not batteries
- Blame aimed at leadership (Elkann) for forcing the electric direction
- Some positivity around tech innovation, amplified 'real' sounds, and safety records
- Nostalgic videos imagining Enzo Ferrari's horrified reaction going viral

Sentiment Takeaways

- Overwhelmingly negative from traditional Italian car enthusiasts and purists
- Polarized — loud disappointment and betrayal vs. smaller tech-forward acceptance
- Emotional, sarcastic tone with Ø>Ý. emojis, roasts, and critical YouTube analyses dominating
- Strong nostalgia vs. future tension; many feel the brand has lost its essence
